

To: FCC; As it is, the control of the mass media by business determines that there will be a homogeneity of opinion and information presented. As it is, there is the possibility that different corporations will have different agendas and will as a result present a somewhat different selection of information. If You allow Cross ownership the likelihood is that there will be even less diversity than now with the material to be offered by print, radio or TV all pre-determined by a central source.

This is not changed by the so called public broadcasting in that they by large either access the 'news' via the wires or from NPR which provides the Governments views.

Further unification of available information from the mass media will ultimately drive thinking people to the internet where they may access any number of differing viewpoints!

M.D. Rogers M.S. Mass Media/Communications